Urban Affairs Association

Mission & History

The Urban Affairs Association (UAA) is the international professional organization for urban scholars, researchers, and public service professionals.

UAA is dedicated to creating interdisciplinary spaces for engaging in intellectual and practical discussions about urban life. Through theoretical, empirical, and action-oriented research, the UAA fosters diverse activities to understand and shape a more just and equitable urban world. (Adopted March 12, 2010)

UAA is the successor organization to the Council of University Institutes for Urban Affairs, formed in Boston in 1969 by a group of directors of university urban programs. As urban affairs developed as a professional and academic field, the need for an organization that welcomed urban faculty, professionals, and students as well as urban program directors and deans became increasingly apparent. In recognition of this need, in 1981 the organization's name was changed to the Urban Affairs Association. Today, UAA includes over 600 institutional, individual, and student members from colleges and universities throughout North America, Europe and Asia. Among its other activities, UAA sponsors the Journal of Urban Affairs, a refereed annual journal, publishing manuscripts related to urban research and policy analysis of interest to both scholars and practitioners. All UAA members receive the Journal of Urban Affairs as part of their membership fee.

Join Us in Celebrating the Life of Our Beloved Colleagues ...

Jean-Pierre Collin

At the end of December, our colleague and friend Professor Jean-Pierre Collin passed away following a long illness. As a member of the UAA since the late 1990s, he attended many annual meetings and was part of the local host committee for the 2006 meeting held in Montréal. The Montreal conference was a very significant benchmark for UAA.

Through the efforts of Jean-Pierre and his colleagues at INRS-Urbanisation Culture Société, a new set of relationships emerged between U.S.-based urbanists and colleagues in Quebec. These relationships have helped to diversify the make-up of UAA conferences, and enriched North American urban scholarship.

Jean-Pierre contributed to this development through a long and successful career as a researcher and professor. Political scientist and historian by training, he conducted a remarkable amount of research on political and institutional transformations of Quebec and North American municipalities and metropolitan areas.

In recent years he explored new cultural practices taking place on the Montreal music scene, and analyzed the process of suburbanization in Vietnam. In addition to his research activities, Jean-Pierre trained many new scholars in Urban Studies. He was the founder of the Cities Regions World (VRM - Villes Régions Monde) network established in the early 2000s. Supported by the Quebec Society and Culture Research Funds, VRM has become a foremost interuniversity network in Quebec for the promotion of research and training in urban studies.

In addition to his professional achievements and his contribution to the development of Urban Studies in Quebec, Jean-Pierre was a kind and generous man, who gave himself fully to the University and to every student, colleague, and friend he came to know. Through his many years of scholarship, service and mentorship, he has left an enduring legacy.

Nohad Toulan

In late October 2013, the UAA community lost a dear friend and respected colleague--Nohad Toulan. Nohad was a champion of many causes, not the least of which was his love and career-long dedication to building urban studies as a field. The penultimate expression of this devotion was the realization of the College of Urban and Public Affairs at Portland State University, which he founded. Within UAA, he played key service roles as member of the Governing Board from 1980-1983, and Local Host Chair of the 1995 Portland Annual Meeting. Most striking was his unrelenting leadership in advocating for urban studies program development across the globe. He was the kind of colleague who was always there when you needed support and sage advice.

Dr. Nohad A. Toulan was Dean Emeritus of the College of Urban and Public Affairs at Portland State University, and Distinguished Professor Emeritus of Urban Studies and Planning. He was an internationally recognized urban planner who contributed extensively to the development of major urban and regional plans in the U.S., the Middle East, North and West Africa. Dr. Toulan served as an adviser to the United Nations Development Program and to local and foreign governments on development issues. He was a member of the CRAG committee that drafted the Portland Urban Growth Boundary and also served and chaired numerous task forces for the City of Portland.

A native of Egypt, he grew up in Cairo and Alexandria. He received a degree in Architecture from the University of Cairo, a Masters Degree in City Planning from Berkeley, and a Ph.D. from the University of Pennsylvania in Philadelphia. In 1965 he became the first Planning Director of the Greater Cairo Region and he is the author of many of the concepts that continue to shape policy in that growing region. In 1966 he guided the development of new urban policies for the Cairo Metropolitan area, under UN auspices. In 1972 he came to PSU from New York where he was on the faculty of Architecture and Planning at Columbia University.

While on a 20-month leave of absence from PSU in 1984-'85, he directed the preparation of a very comprehensive regional plan for the Holy City of Mecca which presented extraordinary challenges. He has received numerous awards in Oregon and nationally for his leadership and vision as a professional planner.

UAA honored Nohad's contributions last year at the San Francisco conference when he was inducted into the UAA Service Honor Roll.

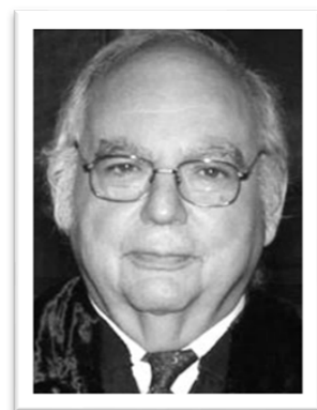

THURSDAY MORNING PLENARY SPEAKERS

Session Title: A Different Kind of River Walk: Reflections on San Antonio and Latino Grassroots Movements

Ernesto Cortés, Jr.

How Building a Broad-Based Organization Challenges the Tyranny of the Expert: The Power of Ordinary-Looking Extraordinary People

Ernesto Cortés, Jr. is the co-director of the Industrial Areas Foundation (IAF) which provides leadership training and civics education to poor and moderate-income people across the US and UK. Cortés has been instrumental in the building of over 30 broad-based organizations whose hallmark is the development and training of ordinary people to do extraordinary things. He is the executive director of the 30 organizations of the West / Southwest IAF. He formally launched this work in 1974, starting with the Communities Organized for Public Service (COPS), the nationally recognized church-based organization of San Antonio's west and south side communities. This work has since expanded to include organizing projects across ten states including Texas, California, Nevada, Arizona, Louisiana, Nebraska, New Mexico, Iowa, Oklahoma and Mississippi.

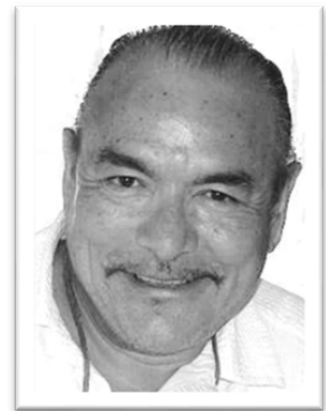

Over the years, these organizations have leveraged billions of dollars for poorer communities including $700 million in infrastructure improvements in the colonias (areas of Texas which lacked basic drainage systems) in the 80s and 90s, $2.8 billion in increased public funding to equalize school funding in Texas in the mid-1980s, and in recent years, $15 million in state funding for workforce development projects equipping underemployed adults with job training options. Millions more have been invested (and saved) in community level infrastructure, healthcare reform and housing. By building the capacity of constituents to create the political will to mobilize for hard monies, IAF organizations have built ten independently operating labor market intermediaries: Project Quest in San Antonio, Capital IDEA in Austin, Project ARRIBA in El Paso, Project VIDA in the Rio Grande Valley, JobPATH in Tucson, NOVA in Louisiana, Skills-Quest in Dallas, Capital IDEA-Houston, Arizona Career Pathways in Phoenix, and Project IOWA in Des Moines. The graduation rates of these projects consistently outpace those of the community college with which they partner, transforming over 12,000 adults into knowledge workers equipped with needed skills in high demand fields. MIT economist Paul Osterman has also documented the results of living wage campaigns in Texas finding they raised the wages of 10,000+ in the Valley plus those in Austin and San Antonio. Cortés also envisioned and launched the Alliance Schools strategy – a much lauded initiative to engage communities of adults in public education. The success of the Alliance schools in raising test scores by building a culture of collaboration has been well documented, most recently by the Annenberg Institute for School Reform.

Cortés has been awarded honorary degrees from Princeton University, Rutgers University, Southern Methodist University, University of Houston and University of St. Edwards in Austin. In addition to being the recipient of the HJ Heinz Award in Public Policy and the MacArthur Genius Award, Cortés has completed multiple fellowships at the JFK School of Government at Harvard and MIT's Department of Urban Studies and Planning (Martin Luther King Jr.). He is a graduate of Texas A & M University.

David Montejano

How the Chicano Movement of the 1970s Changed San Antonio

David Montejano is Professor of Ethnic Studies and History and former Chair of the Center for Latino Policy Research at the University of California, Berkeley. Previously he was an Associate Professor of History and Sociology and Director of the Center for Mexican American Studies at the University of Texas at Austin. He joined the Berkeley faculty in 2002. Professor Montejano's major areas of interest include Comparative and Historical Sociology, Political Sociology, Social Change, Race and Ethnic Relations, and Community Studies. A native of San Antonio, Texas, he received a B.A. from the University of Texas at Austin and two Masters and a Ph.D. in Sociology from Yale University.

Professor Montejano is the author of the prizewinning historical overview, Anglos and Mexicans in the Making of Texas, 1836- 1986, published by the University of Texas Press in 1987. The awards included the Frederick Jackson Turner prize, awarded by the Organization of American Historians, for the best first book in American History, and the T. R. Fehrenbach prize, awarded by the Texas Historical Commission, for best book in Texas history. Anglos and Mexicans is now in its 14th Printing, and has been translated and published in Mexico (Mexico City: Editorial Alianza, 1991). The sequel, titled Quixote's Soldiers: A Local History of the Chicano Movement, 1966- 1981, was published by the University of Texas Press in 2010. This book has also received critical acclaim and awards, including the 2012 Book Award from the National Association for Chicana/Chicano Studies and, for the second time, the T. R. Fehrenbach prize in Texas History. Most recently, Professor Montejano authored the companion book to Quixote's Soldiers, titled Sancho's Journal: Exploring the Political Edge With the Brown Berets (University of Texas Press, 2012). With the publication of Sancho's Journal, Montejano brings closure to a line of inquiry that has been thirty-five years in the making.

During his time in Texas, Dr. Montejano served on the Texas Commission on the Arts (1992-1998) as a Governor Ann Richards appointee. He was inducted into the Texas Institute of Letters in 1995. As Director of the Center for Mexican American Studies at the University of Texas, Dr. Montejano spearheaded several initiatives in higher education, including the design of the Texas Top Ten Percent admissions plan, which became state law in 1997. Dr. Montejano has continued his involvement in higher education admissions policy at the University of California, Berkeley. Most recently, he was a consultant for the PBS series on "Latino Americans."

FRIDAY MORNING PLENARY SPEAKER

2014 UAA-SAGE Marilyn J. Gittell Activist Scholar Award Lecture

Christine Drennon

Dr. Drennon is the Director of the Urban Studies Program, at Trinity University, in San Antonio. In addition, Dr. Drennon served as the research partner on the Promise Neighborhood planning effort, and is currently the research director of the Choice Neighborhood Initiative, and the Byrne Criminal Justice Initiative – three federally-funded projects geared to revitalizing San Antonio's eastside neighborhoods. Those neighborhoods have the highest poverty rates, lowest educational attainment rates, and highest recidivism rates in the City. In that capacity, she is responsible for community engagement, data collection and analysis, and project impact assessment -- ensuring that resident voices are represented in these neighborhood revitalization efforts.

Recently, her work revealed the strong correlation between pre-K attendance and later success in school and led to the creation of additional pre-K sites. Her findings on the lack of social services and amenities in the area resulted in the designation of the local middle school as a 'community school' by the school district. Additional engagement in the neighborhood with youth on probation revealed that issues as simple as transportation cause many to miss their appointments with probation officials, thus violating probation and often having it revoked. Presentation of these findings to the probation department, police department, housing authority, and city officials resulted in proposed strategies to place probation officers in the neighborhood for increased access.

Dr. Drennon received her M.A. in Geography from the University of Wisconsin, Madison, and her Ph.D. in Geography at the University of Texas, Austin. She serves on the Board of the Ella Austin Community Center and the Alamo Community Group (an affordable housing provider). She has served as an expert witness for MALDEF, and finally, she has published most recently in Geographical Review, and Journal of Geography in Higher Education.

About the Award: The UAA-SAGE Marilyn Gittell Activist Scholar Award and Lecture have been established to highlight the importance of field-based urban scholarship and promote the dissemination of work by activist urban scholars. The inspiration for this award and lecture is the career of Dr. Marilyn Gittell, former Director of the Howard Samuels Center and Professor of Political Science at The Graduate School at City University of New York. Over the course of her career, Dr. Gittell became well-known for research that dealt with difficult policy issues, that directly engaged the communities impacted by those issues, and that challenged both scholars and policymakers to consider the outcomes and implications of that research. Thus the award seeks to honor the contributions of a scholar whose research record shows a direct relationship between activism, scholarship and engagement with communities. The lecture is presented by the urban scholar who has been selected to receive the award. The recipient of the award will be an individual who is, or has been, engaged in field-based research in the host city of the annual conference.

9:15am – 10:35am C TH1.13 Fiscal and Intergovernmental Influences Facing Texas Cities Encino (Westin 1st Floor)

Presenters: Richard Cole, James Fisher, Mike Foreman, Scott Wayman, Jeff Coyle

Moderators: Robert Whelan

UAA: Proposed Colloquy Impact of Sequestration on Texas Cities: Borders and Non-Borders Created by the Budget Control Act of 2011, the process known as “sequestration” was designed to reduce the federal deficit by making automatic defense and non-defense spending reductions totaling approximately $1 trillion from federal budgets between FY 2013 and FY 2021. The sequester went into effect March 2013, reducing federal spending about $80 billion for that year, and is scheduled to reduce spending by about $100 billion for FY 2014 and every year thereafter. Cities and states, both of which rely heavily on federal grants, will experience reductions of about $10 billion per year every year that sequestration is in effect. Cities, in particular, will experience reductions in CDBG and HOME housing funds in addition to reductions in federally-funded law enforcement grants, energy assistance programs, transportation projects, various environmental programs, infrastructure, job training, education, and emergency management, among others. Additionally, localities whose economies are heavily dependent on federal civilian and military workforces may well experience additional budget woes as sequestration cuts and resulting personnel reductions in these activities impact local property values and sales tax collections. Possibly, cities in fragile border regions will suffer from these reductions even more so than others. Some forecast consequences of almost apocalyptic proportions. Sequestration, according to the National League of Cities, would be likely to “significantly impact cities and towns and their economic recovery and growth...leading potentially to another recession.”¹ To date, though, very little is known about the actual experiences that cities and communities have had with the first round of sequestration cuts, or about its anticipated future impacts. Have budgets been trimmed, have personnel been reduced, have taxes and other revenue streams declined, are urban economies suffering? And, if so, can any of this be traced to the sequestration action and will any impacts found to differ by urban characteristics, including border proximities? To respond to these questions, we propose a colloquy consisting of both scholars and practitioners, focused on the implications of sequestration for Texas cities. The scholars will present results of a survey conducted of city managers of all Texas cities over 10,000 in population (approximately 250) designed to measure the consequences (both present and future) of these sequestration activities on local services, inter-local contracting, outsourcing, consolidation opportunities, property taxes, sales tax collections, personnel adjustments, and the like. Commenting on survey results, as well as on experiences in their own communities, will be city managers, or other appropriate officials, from selected Texas cities, including those from the North Texas area, San Antonio, and the border region. The results of the panel...

9:15am – 10:35am C TH1.19 Urban Trends in Central & South America and the Caribbean: Poverty, Informality, Housing Policies, Labor Force and Migration in the XXI Century. [SPECIAL TRACK: URBAN ISSUES IN CENTRAL AND SOUTH AMERICA AND THE CARIBBEAN] Camino Real (Westin 1st Floor)

Presenters: Flavio A M de Souza, Janina Leon, Cecilia Giusti, Mercedes Di Virgilio

Moderators: Cecilia Giusti

This session will focus on current trends in this region in relation to key variables explaining the urban situation: informality, underemployment, poverty, inequality, housing realities, and microfinancing both for business and housing. Speakers will present insights from a diverse body of research and actual engagement they have been involved in specific projects. They will address actual urban issues in Brazil, Argentina, Peru and Mexico, as well as comparing with Latin American migrants in the US. Discussion is expected to address the variety of approaches on state interventions in the region: from strong state intervention to more market-driven policies. Labor markets and migration, both national and international, are also to be discussed in the context of the countries mentioned.

Moderators: James Smith

This colloquy is based on a special issue in the journal Urban Research and Practice, preliminarily titled “Into the Twenty-First Century: North American Urban Governance and Development in a Global Context” (forthcoming in late 2013). We attempt to provide a comprehensive overview not merely of recent developments in North American urban studies but also to engage the nature of the field itself and its inherent fragmentation. In selecting the articles for the special issue, and the speakers for this panel, I have included a range of studies focused on common themes in our diverse discipline. We do not draw on studies focused on a dominant or common paradigm, but instead present a collection of research using different methods, different contexts, and different theoretical constructs. Mostly, this collection of research aims to demonstrate the ways in which the diversity or fragmentation of the current moment serves as a strength of the field. Colloquy speakers will also engage in a poignant debate on the new directions in which studies of North American urban politics is developing under the influence of globalization. Furthermore, the purpose of the special issue and this panel is to encourage dialogue between different perspectives and methodologies within the field in order to benefit from the great variety in approaches of urban studies scholars. Specifically, the scholars on this panel contemplate the nature of economic development, the scale of governance in North American regions, the intense debate regarding public housing in U.S. cities, and the ways in which new forms of governance continually alter the urban experience in North American cities.

Presenters: Virginia Parks, Saru Jayaraman, Nik Theodore

El Rincon De Maria (Westin 1st Floor)

Moderators: Louise Simmons

Low wage workers' issues have erupted into the spotlight in urban areas across the U.S. through several highly visible campaigns over recent years. These new movements highlight economic justice concerns and spur new forms of labor organizing built on community support and participation. Their issues – low wages, irregular employment, wage theft, jobs safety and health – are redefining urban social justice agendas and the labor movement. From car wash workers, day laborers, agricultural workers, restaurant and fast food workers, big box workers, domestic workers, taxi drivers, workfare workers and previously incarcerated people, a new economic agenda is inspiring the public, the labor movement and community activists. Immigrant workers' concerns are central in this agenda. These workers face many challenges and vulnerabilities. Many are in industries not protected by federal labor law in terms of rights on the job. Fair labor standards are often flagrantly violated. Immigrant workers fear being reported to immigration authorities if they speak up and demand rights. The traditional labor movement is only just beginning to grapple with how to incorporate these issues into their agenda and organizations. Numerous additional factors could be listed. Despite these obstacles, low wage vulnerable workers are asserting themselves, turning their issues into matters of public concern, with particular relevance in the urban areas in which they organize. These workers are living, breathing examples of the Occupy Movement's “99%.” This colloquy features leading scholars involved with these issues. They are experts on immigrant worker centers, day laborers, domestic workers and other groups. They have written extensively about how these various workers organize and have deep connections to the organizations involved in these movements. The colloquy will take up the following questions: -what issues are raised by workers in these various sectors? -how do these contest the contours of neo-liberalist labor relations? -how are these workers shaping urban social movements in the current context?

Moderators: Jasmine Alinder

Since the oldest graduate programs in urban affairs are now celebrating their "golden" anniversaries, it is an opportune time to reflect on the vitality of those programs. This colloquy brings together a group of program directors and department chairs to consider the current state of graduate student recruitment, retention, and research in urban studies. The discussion will focus on questions such as: Is urban studies still relevant to graduate students? How has the way that we train graduate students changed over time? How are we different than traditional disciplines? And is that difference (presumably interdisciplinary) still valued? How have programs adapted or changed over the years to stay vital?

10:55am – 12:15pm C TH2.17 Community Land Trusts: Challenging Concepts of Propertied Citizenship

Presenters: Deirdre Oakley, Hillary Caldwell, Susan Saegert, Deshonay Dozier, Carranza (Westin 2nd Floor) Jeffrey Lowe

Moderators: Susan Saegert

This colloquy addresses the mobilization of different approaches to discourses of citizenship that shape meanings and experiences of home in a globalized world. According to Roy (2003) the dominant U.S. paradigm of "propertied citizenship" inscribes an "ontology or way of being in the world, emphasizes a system of values and norms, requires certain epistemologies or ways of knowing, and is constantly articulated and extended" (p. 464). Roy's paradigm helps understand how housing policies and practices have far-reaching and troubling implications for cultural and political values and norms. Ruptures in the dominant homeownership paradigm, c.f. the foreclosure crisis and homelessness, as well as alternative paradigms like Shared Equity models, deploy different discourses and practices shedding light on, and challenging the dominant paradigm. Speakers draw on different case studies to explore 1) how discourses surrounding ruptures and alternatives of home reconstruct and disrupt the discourse of "propertied citizenship" and 2) what kinds of political constraints and possibilities these discourses reveal for efforts to transform the dominant paradigm of U.S. homeownership. Oakley sets the stage by discussing failures of market-based low and moderate-income homeownership to increase economic and social capital. Caldwell explores how different, often conflicting, meanings of home and citizenship shape the NYC Community Land Initiative (NYCCLI), an effort led by homeless activists. Dozier uses City of Lakes CLT residents' experiences to reveal reconstructions of homeownership into a social mission of accessibility and affordability. Lowe illuminates the Independence Heights CLT experiences of African American Houstonians of the tension between housing commodification and heritage/cultural sustainability.

Integrated data systems (IDS) are those that merge together data from various human service agencies on people at the individual level. An IDS can be used to improve case management for individuals, or analyzed to inform advocacy, policymaking, targeting, and program evaluation. This type of system might include data from social safety net programs, child welfare agencies, juvenile justice records, student enrollment and performance, Medicaid claims, and homeless information systems. An IDS allows one to study public policy in a more holistic manner and not from the perspective of an individual's contact with only one agency. With support from the Annie E. Casey Foundation, the National Neighborhood Indicators Partnership (NNIP) launched a cross-site project in six cities to bring policy research using IDS one step further, to connect IDS data to information about neighborhoods and place. During this colloquy we will present early findings from our cross-site work and hear from two sites involved in the project. In Cleveland, our partner at Case Western Reserve University who built and operates an IDS for Cuyahoga County will work with the Ohio Longitudinal Data Archive at Ohio State University's Ohio Education Research Center to understand how child welfare and juvenile justice involvement affects high school graduation and college matriculation rates. In Pittsburgh, the NNIP Partner, Pittsburgh Neighborhood and Community Information System will work with the Allegheny County Department of Human Services to study how neighborhood characteristics affect absenteeism in public schools in three school districts.

Politics in America is, invoking Orwell, in a bad way. America remains politically trapped in a liberal-conservative/red-blue/left-right/Democrat-Republican vortex. To say this about American politics is also to say it about urban American politics, for increasingly they are one in the same. Additionally, one significant result of this political quagmire is that the social problems of America – which are, for the most part, the urban problems of America – continue to fester. Problems of employment, living standards, schooling, housing, criminal justice, and – perhaps most fundamental to all of these – economic and racial inequality all grow deeper and deeper in absence of the political conditions necessary to address them in a serious way.

So, if we need a new American politics, how might it come about? Where are the openings to forge new political alliances, including those that might help us break free from the current ideological vortex? What might a restructured (and reconstituted) American politics look like? What sort of policy/institutional design agendas might help facilitate the development of this new politics? What might its ideological (idea-based) appeal be? Where might its material basis be located? What are its overall prospects and possibilities to serve as the foundation for the kind of social change necessary to address in a serious way the urban problems of America?

The presenters for this colloquy will engage these (and related) questions with an eye to generating broader

- Philanthropy's intersection with comprehensive community development continues to grow as evidenced by the Obama Administration's Promise Neighborhoods program, the increasing engagement of health care foundations in place-based initiatives, and the interest of the Federal Reserve in developing public-private partnerships to rebuild low-income communities. A recent survey identified approximately 60 examples of philanthropic support for comprehensive community development. Despite their shared desire to catalyze community change, these efforts vary by scope, approach, philosophies of change, and outcomes. As more foundations focus their resources on holistic place-based revitalization, it is worthwhile to consider the lessons learned from these cases. This colloquy will examine best practices based on innovations from the field as presented by practitioners and analysts. Reflecting the location of UAA's annual meeting, this panel focuses on philanthropic support for place-based revitalization efforts in Sunbelt city neighborhoods that have not received the same attention as East Coast, postindustrial sites. Of particular importance will be lessons learned from case studies in Dallas, Los Angeles, and San Diego. Drs. Martinez-Cosio and Rabinowitz Bussell are co-authors of Catalysts for Change: 21st Century Philanthropy and Community Development (Routledge, 2013), one of the first comprehensive studies of private philanthropy's role in community change initiatives. Joe Horiye is the V.P. for Community Development for the Jacobs Center for Neighborhood Innovation, a family foundation in San Diego that garnered headlines by offering an IPO to residents of an underserved community in order to share the profits of a shopping center it developed. Tom Dewar co-authored the seminal Voices from the Field III: Lessons and Challenges from Two Decades of Community Change Efforts with Anne C. Madero (Westin 2nd Floor)

Co-Authors: Amy Khare

Moderators: Rolf Pendall

The Obama Administration has launched an agenda specifically considering the value of local places. Its policies concern strategic investments of federal resources. It has two prominent place-based initiatives, awarded to over 75 local communities. Promise Neighborhoods aims to improve educational outcomes of children and youth through educational programs and family and community supports. Choice Neighborhoods aims to replace distressed assisted housing developments with mixed-income housing while improving resident services and neighborhood assets. This colloquy will share emerging findings from a national research evaluation for Choice and a technical assistance contract for Promise currently being conducted by the Urban Institute and other partners. The colloquy will also bring to life--through deeper description and interpretation--how these federal policies are being shaped and implemented by people working and living in three Promise and Choice sites: Washington, DC; Langley Park, Maryland; and San Antonio. For Choice, we will explore early insights into key research questions, including: What did the grantees set out to accomplish and how did these goals evolve over time? How did the federal-level policy design influence implementation decisions? How have the investments been coordinated and leveraged? How have the intended beneficiaries been engaged in planning and to what end? For Promise, we will address key research questions, including: How are grantees using data to both improve the quality of their programs and services and to evaluate the success of their initiatives? What key data sources are grantees using and how are they involving the communities they serve in data collection? What lessons are emerging about how communities share data and track performance for a common target population? The panel participants will share both opportunities and challenges of these two initiatives, as well as implications for national policy design and practice.

	Presenters: Fritz Wagner, Jane Brooks, Roger Caves, Elise Bright
	This breakfast roundtable will present perspectives from a group of academics from across the US on the topic of creating livable, healthy and sustainable communities. The development of such communities is becoming an important part of community development, urban design, policy planning and urban affairs. With the desire by urban scholars throughout N. America and Europe to move from communities that are often described as sterile and boring places to live, it is important to understand the factors that make communities livable. This roundtable will discuss what has gone wrong in many communities and will offer suggestions for making them more livable.

7:00am – 8:00am	B FRI-BRT Using System Dynamics Models to Support Collaboration and Decision-making with Diverse Groups Presenters: Jane Branscomb The purpose of this roundtable is to discuss experiences and lessons learned in the use of system dynamics models to support shared decision making, particularly among diverse stakeholders with varying levels of technical knowledge. Sophisticated models of complex systems are increasingly prevalent and accessible. When well designed and based on solid science they are powerful tools, applying more extensive data and simulating more complicated interactions than even seasoned experts in a given subject can do mentally. The ability to test alternative interventions and compare plausible long-term trends virtually before committing significant resources in the real world has great potential to assist decision makers. The discussion leaders have been directly involved in the application of numerous system dynamics models, primarily in the areas of health promotion, disease prevention, and health system transformation. The conversation will not be limited to these content areas, however, as it will focus on issues such as how these tools are explained to audiences that may include math wizards and technophobes; how their use is facilitated in groups; challenges and successes in the application of models, and other related experiences of participants. 9:15am – 10:35am	C FR1.01 Beyond Complete Streets: Reclaiming San Antonio's Streets to Promote Active, Healthy Living Presenters: Andres Andujar, Mukul Malhotra, Susan Goltsman Moderators: Susan Goltsman Streets take up about 30% of the land area in the average American city. Why not use streets to promote active living and healthy communities instead of just for driving? re:Streets -- a new approach to fully utilizing the public realm through cutting edge best practices -- can radically transform a community and set a new direction for the development of healthy human habitats. The session will highlight how the Hemisfair Park Area in San Antonio is being transformed with multi-pronged community engagement to incorporate re:Streets concepts and revitalize and catalyze the neighborhood. A vibrant multi-modal streetscape environment is being created that dramatically improves pedestrian access, safety and comfort; incorporates bicycle facilities and streetcar and transit improvements; and uses tools to incentivize change and activate the street. The Hemisfair Park streetscape incorporates a diverse set of sustainable design solutions -- from context sensitive planting to integrated stormwater management. The project celebrates and strengthens the area's unique identity by incorporating iconic art, gateway art, well-designed wayfinding and signage, and programmable open spaces that host festivals and other cultural activities. The case study and presentations will illustrate the results of re:Streets -- a three-year research effort funded by the National Endowment for the Arts. re:Streets is a fundamental rethinking of America's streets based on the most recent research. re:Streets explores the future of streets and what America's roadways would be like if they were designed for living, instead of just driving. The research effort has built a nationwide constituency for translating research into action. re:Streets goes beyond Complete Streets to examine nine areas that expand the function of streets to support active living. Presenters: Graciela Fernández de Córdova

Navarro Ballroom (Westin 2nd Floor)

At the beginning of the twenty first century, the focus from municipal management on open public spaces acquired special relevance as a way of integrating marginal neighborhoods. Metropolitan parks are a successful urban intervention due to their large span and massive turnout. However, restricted or close access characteristics generate more limits in their use and more physical and visual borders. As a counterbalance, one could ask: How do the physical and social components of the neighborhood scale contribute to an IPS design with functions and spaces for their neighbors? This paper discusses bibliography pertinent to this question and the last information and statistical analysis of housing and population census. The quantitative and qualitative analysis is accomplished by comparing metropolitan and neighborhood scales with the IPS strategic procedure experienced from conception to functioning. As a case study, the two most representative space scales are taken from Metropolitan Lima's Carabayllo District. Main results: The three components are valued: neighborhood, strategic process, and urban-architectural projects. Neighborhood influences citizen's behaviors and allows defining the IPS as a social space marker and an extension of home, in good habitability and security conditions. Strategic process defines the reinforcement of neighborhood actors' capacities for their active participation in obtaining the IPS. Urban-architectural projects, whose conception and design as a daily use allows their insertion in the physical and social fabric, eliminating borders and existing limitations. The result shows that the strategic procedure permits generating the positive effects sought on the IPS, as opposed to the metropolitan scale, which only satisfies needs inside public space. The challenge is to replicate the positive aspects of the proposed strategic procedure and reorient public investment towards more IPS.

3:30pm – 4:00pm S FR-PS12 [POSTER] Analyzing the Use of Affordable Housing Development as a Neighbourhood Revitalization Tool in Shrinking Cities

Navarro Ballroom (Westin 2nd Floor)

Presenters: Julie Mah

Property abandonment and disinvestment are major planning and policy concerns for shrinking cities. Vacant and abandoned properties tend to lead to more abandonment, continuing disinvestment and deteriorating housing conditions. Traditional planning strategies that rely on the private sector to redevelop vacant and abandoned properties have been shown in the literature to be largely ineffectual. A more effective strategy might be to facilitate the transfer of these vacant and abandoned properties to non-profits for conversion into community assets such as affordable housing, which might then act as a redevelopment catalyst or stabilizing force. However, some scholars have argued against building government-assisted housing in declining cities because of potential detrimental impacts on fragile housing markets that already have a surplus of housing and where replacement (construction) costs exceed the local housing values.

My doctoral research will explore the empirical validity of both perspectives by using Detroit as a case study to investigate the role affordable housing development has played and could play in revitalizing neighbourhoods in shrinking cities. This poster will present the findings from a situational analysis of subsidized housing development in Detroit, which provides the necessary foundational understanding of the historical development patterns of affordable housing production in the city from 1990-2010.

Presenters: Karelle Samuda

Navarro Ballroom (Westin 2nd Floor)

The discourse on the role of civil society and citizen participation in promoting social and economic development is not novel. In fact, such a discussion can be found in Plato's Republic where his concepts of assembly, voting, and freedom are all basic tenets of modern day democratic states and citizen engagement. In the 1990s, the rise of civil society and diverse social movements became an influential force in development. Many countries have renewed their focus on participatory approaches to strengthen their society's social capital, to improve community development outcomes, and to improve governance systems. Jamaica is one these countries and explicitly includes —strengthen [ing] the process of citizen participation in governancell as part of its Vision 2030: National Development Plan. The focus on promoting citizen participation raises the question of what individual characteristics are associated with participation in community development projects. In this paper, I use 2006 survey data from the Latin American Public Opinion Project (LAPOP) to analyze what individual characteristics are associated with the likelihood of participation in community development projects in Jamaica. The results from the logistic regression model indicate that location, sex, job type and language spoken at home impact an individual's likelihood of participating in community development projects in Jamaica

Presenters: Kate Brunette

Co-Authors: Eve Bratman

There is a growing consensus that transit systems can be an effective means to address poverty alleviation and should target it as a goal. Literature suggests that the urban poor benefit disproportionately to benefits in public transportation relative to middle- or upper-class city residents. Still, little is known about the specific extents to which transit access correlates to poverty and poverty improvements. This paper tests the relationship between transit systems and poverty alleviation through looking at the case of Bogota, Colombia's Transmilenio system. The Transmilenio is the city's much-lauded bus rapid transit (BRT) system. When it was developed, the Transmilenio signified an emphatic policy turn toward prioritizing public transportation over expanding the highway system, which predominantly served the car-owning middle and upper classes. To what extent has access to the Transmilenio improved the well-being of the urban poor in Bogota? This paper analyzes the relation between expansions in transit access and changes in poverty rates over time. Using geostatistical analysis (GIS) to compare distance from the transit network with income and transit-use data over time, this research contributes a quantitative analysis which substantiates existing literature on the effectiveness of the Transmilenio as a transit system in relation to poverty. The research contributes a granular and quantitative analysis, as well as temporal analysis of the data (based on the first two stages of the Transmilenio project, from 2000-2011) to substantiate the case that the Transmilenio is, in fact, a significant contributor to poverty alleviation over time in Bogota.

S FR-PS15 [POSTER] Early Effects of Neighborhood Stabilization in Los Angeles

Navarro Ballroom (Westin 2nd Floor)

Presenters: Kenya Covington

Co-Authors: Geoffrey West

As a result of the mounting housing crisis, the U.S. economy in 2008 declined significantly. Comprising over a fifth of Gross Domestic Product nationally, the fallout of the housing market ushered in a whole series of economic crises in U.S. cities. As a part of the Obama Administration's response to the crises, they initiated and Congress approved stimulus programs that targeted neighborhoods greatly affected by the economic downturn. One such program is the Neighborhood Stabilization Program (NSP). This program was formulated to immediately address unprecedented foreclosures and abandonment in 2008. In 2009 and 2010 subsequent re-authorizations helped to continue efforts to stabilize neighborhoods. Nationally, over 500 grantees have received funds estimating $6 billion. In this paper we ask the question, are there positive local economic development impacts that can be reported now, only four years after the first check was written to execute the acquisition, rehabilitation/construction, and mortgaging of foreclosed and vacant properties? Utilizing a method of cluster analysis typically used in geography, our methods allow us to examine the immediate areas around the parcels of properties acquired. In the half mile buffers we are looking to examine key economic development, housing market, and job variables to provide an early picture of how neighborhood stabilization affected local neighborhoods in the Los Angeles metropolitan area. We will compare the pre NSP period (2007) with the post NSP period (2011). Where would grantee neighborhoods be without the creation of the NSP program? Taking into account the characteristics of the neighborhood, the results will shed light on the immediate effects of putting foreclosed and abandoned properties back in service.

S FR-PS18 [POSTER] Shrinking Cities: Examining the Definition, Drivers, Effects and Overarching Theories

Navarro Ballroom (Westin 2nd Floor)

Presenters: Maxwell Hartt

Demographically and economically, there is an ongoing major global shift that has resulted in the emergence of both 'global' and 'shrinking' cities. International production systems and global networks have transferred considerable manufacturing jobs from developed to developing countries, resulting in the population shrinkage of industrial cities. Aging populations and low fertility rates, characteristics of a second demographic transition, have also impacted population levels in OECD countries - as have post-socialist transitions in Eastern Europe. As these demographic and economic changes have occurred over the past century, urban change theories have evolved alongside. This paper examines the variance in proposed 'shrinking cities' definitions and consolidates the various relevant theoretical perspectives from the economic, social and urban literature to determine how they have evolved alongside major population shifts and global economic restructuring. Lastly, a conceptual framework for urban shrinkage is presented, which details the (1) drivers, (2) economic, social and environmental effects, (3) relevant social and economic theories and (4) the urban and regional planning policies and strategies.

S FR-PS19 [POSTER] The Effect of Teacher Race-Ethnicity and Gender on Student Expectation for Receiving Quality Teaching

Navarro Ballroom (Westin 2nd Floor)

Presenters: Millie Black

Improving the quality of teaching and increasing student achievement outcomes are shared goals among college educators. It is well documented throughout higher education literature that particular teacher characteristics and teaching techniques affect how and what a student learns. However, far less research exists examining the impact of a teacher's race, ethnicity, and gender on student expectations for receiving quality teaching, particularly at the community college level. This study advances higher education literature by challenging us to think more broadly and critically about factors that influence the classroom environment and academic success. Therefore, this study's central question is whether a teacher's race-ethnicity and gender impact student expectations regarding quality instruction. This study argues that students come into the classroom environment with certain perceptions and develop particular expectations based on a teacher's race-ethnicity and gender. Such race-ethnic and gender based expectations, arguably, influence how students evaluate the quality of teaching. This proposition is tested by using original data collected from community college students across one academic school year. Students were given a questionnaire at the beginning of the course asking about their initial expectations regarding quality teaching and a follow-up questionnaire towards the end of the course. Findings suggest students have lower expectations for receiving quality teaching from minority and female teachers compared to their white and male counterparts.

S FR-PS20 [POSTER] Responding to Segregation and Fragmentation Through a Mixed Financing Approach: The Case of Casa Paulista Program in São Paulo, Brazil [SPECIAL TRACK: URBAN ISSUES IN CENTRAL AND SOUTH AMERICA AND THE CARIBBEAN]

Navarro Ballroom (Westin 2nd Floor)

Presenters: Priscila Izar
Co-Authors: Beatriz del Carmen Martínez González

This paper analyzes ways in which public private partnerships (PPPs) aiming at urban renovation and affordable housing development in global city regions relate to the phenomena of social stratification and territorial fragmentation that can often be observed in these territories. Specifically, it will look at the challenges and opportunities related to the Casa Paulista PPP, promoted by São Paulo state government to renovate downtown São Paulo and develop affordable housing through a mixed income and mixed use approach. São Paulo is a center of the globalized economy. According to Brazil's 2010 Census, the city's downtown districts are already experiencing a population return. Market rate affordable housing has also been prevalent in these districts, representing 50 percent of the region's housing stock in the year 2000. Social housing and neighborhood groups opposing this plan fears that a large scale mixed use and mixed income downtown project will accelerate the region's gentrification. Government officials consider it as an opportunity for leveraging public and private funds to promote property-led local economic development. In line with local economic development literature, this paper's hypothesis is that resources directed towards large-scale downtown real estate renovation result in limited benefit to urban racial and economic minorities and may even contribute to further social segregation and urban sprawl. Through a series of interviews with key representatives of the state and municipal housing departments, real estate developers, investors, and civil society representatives, this paper will identify challenges and opportunities related to the Casa Paulista project, and suggest policies to ameliorate potential gentrification and economic displacement.

- This poster presents findings of a study examining the opportunities for and obstacles to economic development in municipalities throughout Massachusetts. States and cities invest precious resources each year to foster economic development, yet in many cases without much or predictable benefit. This study sought to determine what economic development officers, in municipalities that direct resources to fund such a position, identified as their municipality's opportunities for economic development and the obstacles they face. A body of economic development literature focuses on the effectiveness of local economic development policies. This research seeks to identify the factors external to those policies themselves that assist or obstruct local economic development. The research is part of a larger study of the alignment of local economic development goals and actions. Municipal officials responsible for economic development from forty-seven municipalities in Massachusetts responded to a confidential online survey. Commonly identified obstacles to economic development included issues with infrastructure, and regulatory process or agency difficulties. Commonly identified opportunities to economic development included a lack of sufficient funding as well as the lack of effective leadership at the municipal level.

The document was created by an Advanced Communities class in the Department of Social Work at the University of Texas at San Antonio, in connection with the Mayor's SA 2020 initiative, a comprehensive effort whose goal was to engage the citizens of San Antonio in creating a vision for the future of the city. The Bill of Rights and Responsibilities was developed as part of the Government Accountability and Civic Engagement Vision Area that was developed during the first phase of the SA2020 initiative. Students conducted focus groups and town hall meetings with citizens in each of the City's 10 Council Districts in coming up with the document. This document is notably different than similar documents developed for other jurisdictions across the country in that it contains BOTH rights AND responsibilities. This effort could serve as a model process for other communities with similar initiatives.

- Sao Paulo Metropolitan Area (RMSP) is the largest urban agglomeration in Brazil. Located in Sao Paulo State, which is the most populous and richest Brazilian state. The RMSP is composed of 39 municipalities and currently has about 20 million inhabitants, concentrated in an area of 7800 km², with a population density of 2532 inhabitants/km². It has an urbanization degree of 98.86% its per capita income is U.S. $ 413.00. The air pollution effects on human health has been an important theme of public health. Until the 1980's, air pollution in the RMSP was predominantly due to industrial sources. In 1980, the State Government created the Pollution Control Program by to allocate resources for financing air pollution control systems including equipment and source relocation, consequently, many industries changed from oil boilers to electric ones with positive impact on SO₂ and dust. In 1990's, many industries have moved to other areas due to the increased control enforcement and changes in land use. Currently, vehicles are the main source of air pollution in the SPMA. The estimated current fleet is to be 6.7 million vehicles. The fleet emissions estimative for 2012 are about 220 thousand tons of local pollutants and about 15 million tons of greenhouse gases (GHG). The main source of these emissions are gas and ethanol light duty vehicle, diesel heavy-duty trucks and buses. This fleet is responsible for precursor ozone formation (nitrogen oxides - NO_x and Volatile Organic Compounds - VOC) and particle matter (PM). The SPMA air quality-sampling network has 28 automatic stations. In July 2013, Sao Paulo State government adopted new standards for air quality and was included fine particles (PM_{2.5}) which has a higher risk of serious health hazard. The main air quality concern in SPMA is due to ozone and particulate matter standard exceedence.

S FR-PS26 [POSTER] Food Deserts in Urban and Rural Areas: A Comparison

Presenters: Seve Hartlaub

Navarro Ballroom (Westin 2nd Floor)

Co-Authors: Laura Bierstedt, Mark Hartlaub

The study of healthy food alternatives and their availability in urban areas has been of growing concern (Walker, Block, & Klawachi, 2012). Specifically, it appears that some residents live in what has been called a “food desert” in that the only meat options are fried chicken and hamburgers from fast food restaurants and the only fruit or vegetable options are canned vegetables from corner convenience stores (e.g., Circle K, 7-Eleven). We evaluated the healthy food availability of several foods in various supermarkets in an urban area and in a more rural area. The zip codes of the supermarkets were used to assess general levels of socioeconomic status. We found that the Socio-economic differences do seem to be related to the ready access to less healthy food options. Implications and recommendations are discussed.

S FR-PS27 [POSTER] Community Healthcare Redefined: The Role of Grass-Roots Community Health Organizations and Outreach Workers in Education and Access

Navarro Ballroom (Westin 2nd Floor)

Presenters: Straso Jovanovski

Co-Authors: Seve Hartlaub, Laura Bierstedt, Mark Hartlaub

This paper catalogues approaches to ground-level healthcare services by means of using indigenous community resources as well as leveraging the existent healthcare system. This helps alleviate the mismatch between primary care and overburdened public hospitals. The other ‘side-benefit’ is taking hold of public expenditures through making better use of preventative services. Poverty-fighting strategies are pertinent to increasing equity and social justice. In this respect, emerging economies provide a salient backdrop for studying innovative strategies for increasing equity by improving health outcomes. Community health workers are documented to bring a unique value to low-income and marginalized patients struggling with illness. Some of the greatest impacts have been seen among immigrants, the elderly, and working poor. In spite of well-intended policies, tangible disparities remain, and community groups and their health programs can have an impact. The paper evaluates organizations providing community-based healthcare services, facilitating between individuals, families, and system resources.

S FR-PS29 [POSTER] The Construction of Metropolitan Management Practices from Two Experiences of Territorial Associations in the Metropolitan Region of Curitiba, Brazil

Presenters: William Borges

Navarro Ballroom (Westin 2nd Floor)

Since the Constitution of 1988, metropolitan management in Brazil has been under construction. Its greatest difficulty has been to overcome the dichotomy between functional metropolis and institutional metropolis. As the metropolitan areas are not managed as territorial units, what prevails is the segregated metropolis logic, either from a social, cultural or political view. Within this thematic field, as Brazilian metropolitan management is frail and there is significant development of territorial association practices engaging in managing sectorial policies, our aim in this doctoral research is to give an answer to the following question: Have the experiences of territorial associations in the metropolitan region of Curitiba contributed to the construction of metropolitan management practices? How? Why? We examined Conselho Gestor dos Mananciais (CGM) and Gestão dos Resíduos Sólidos Urbanos (CONRESOL). For this, we raised some major specific questions to this study, such as: 1) How much cooperation is there in both experiences?; 2) Why is there inter-municipal cooperation? (their aims); 3) How the process of generating and mobilizing knowledge for problem identification was established in order to offer alternatives and a solution decision-making?, and 4) Is there metropolitan management? If so, why or why not? This research work consists of some narratives obtained through open interviews, records (produced by several institutes and research centers - IBGE, IPARDES and Observatório das Metrópoles) and from documents and literature review on the topic. In building the plots on the stories of Região Metropolitana de Curitiba (RMC), CGM and CONRESOL, we found that, although there is no metropolitan management in RMC, these experiences have contributed to its construction by establishing inter-sectorial policies, constituting inter-municipal links and spreading some metropolitan territorial unit awareness.

S FR-PS3 [POSTER] Commandeering Suburbia: Should Shrinking Cities Annex Their Neighbors?

Presenters: Austin Zwick

Navarro Ballroom (Westin 2nd Floor)

As suburbanization has led to cities “hollowing” out over the past several decades, cities have undergone significant fiscal strife as the number of taxpayers has substantially decreased. As suburbs flourish, the urban core may go into decline; as these suburbs are able to derive benefits from the central city — such as stadiums, museums, and transit – without directly contributing to the public subsidies that these institutions need to survive; while also imposing negative externalities of traffic and pollution onto the cities. For these reasons, strong public interest in mergers, such as annexation and city-county consolidation, has recently returned after a forty-year hiatus. Milwaukee and Indianapolis performed mergers in the 1960s; Louisville and Kansas City (Kansas) recently underwent mergers in the early 2000s; while Cincinnati and Pittsburgh are now currently exploring the option. Many others, including St. Louis and Chattanooga, start the process and fail to complete it, usually because voters reject it at referendum. This poster will display information on these eight rust belt cities, all chosen for geographic proximity and other similarities. This poster will also graphically represent and compare the changes in total population, inner-core population, economic development, and property values over the past fifty years to see if annexation made a difference, with attempts to solve the questions: What are the common characteristics, as well as the mitigating factors, that make merger efforts succeed or fail? Why do the benefits materialize or not? Most importantly, can this strategy be successfully used to turn around shrinking cities?

S FR-PS30 [POSTER] Well being of Slum Households in Addis Ababa City, Ethiopia

Presenters: Zafu Assefa

Navarro Ballroom (Westin 2nd Floor)

Co-Authors: George Galvis

Health status is a key indicator of human well being. Environmental pollution affects human health in many ways and contributes to a wide variety of diseases. Increasing attention is being devoted both domestically and globally to how environmental pollution affects human health. The agenda for the Sept 2002 World Summit on Sustainable Development identified health as an integral component of sustainable development, and called for a more efficient, equitable, accessible and appropriate health care system for the populations that rely on them. Scientific method for the assessment and management of related risks to human health and the environment is imperative for a developing country like Ethiopia where the exposure levels and variability are relatively higher. This paper examines the well being of the households in slums of Addis Ababa City, in terms of selected parameters. This study used two-stage random sampling technique. In the first stage three slum areas had been selected and in the second stage households were selected. A survey questionnaire used to collect required information. Findings: The study reveals that migrant households live in unhygienic and congested places devoid of basic necessities for a healthy life like housing, water supply, drainage and sanitation. Women and children are the worst victims. Physically, mentally and emotionally they are affected. The rehabilitation programme of the City project is totally inadequate in relation to the mushroom growth of slums. Hence, a comprehensive package incorporating measures to improve urban environment and health status should be launched on a massive scale.

S FR-PS31 [POSTER] A User Study of Techniques for Geovisualizing Uncertainty in Survey Data for Urban Planning

Navarro Ballroom (Westin 2nd Floor)

Presenters: Jason R. Jurjevich

Co-Authors: Meg Merrick

Surveys such as the American Community Survey, undertaken by the U.S. Census Bureau, produce statistics that are often mapped. A key characteristic of these statistics is that they are estimates of a quantity rather than actual, true counts. This means that there is some uncertainty in how well the estimate reflects the true value of the statistic. Although the Census Bureau publishes information about the uncertainty in the statistics, not everyone consults these tables. This research works towards developing methods for including uncertainty information directly in maps of statistics from surveys like the American Community Survey. That way, users of these statistics can easily see the uncertainty in the statistics and consider how it affects decisions they make based upon the mapped statistics. In this poster, we present findings from interviews and surveys with urban planning students in Portland to highlight their response to reading/interpreting maps for various decision-driven scenarios. These findings will prove critical for our next stage of the research, which involves investigating the effectiveness of different visualization techniques designed to communicate that uncertainty to professional planners.

S FR-PS32 [POSTER] Sanctuary City, Open Borders, No Border: Migration and Urban Possibilities

Presenters: Harald Bauder

Navarro Ballroom (Westin 2nd Floor)

Numerous US cities, and recently the first Canadian city, Toronto, have become “sanctuary cities” by adopting municipal policies to provide non-status immigrants with access to municipal services without having to fear detention and deportation. These policies have been widely praised as an important step towards equality and social justice for illegalized immigrants. While many of the activists and NGOs involved in campaigning for the sanctuary city are driven by practical considerations, Canadian activists are grounding their efforts in open-border and no-border politics. This poster examines sanctuary city, open-borders, and no-border arguments, and explores the material and ontological conditions under which these ideas may be possible.

S FR-PS33 [POSTER] Haitians in Miami: Acculturation and Status Attainment after Public Policy Change

Navarro Ballroom (Westin 2nd Floor)

Presenters: Joy Neilson

The United States is dependent on a steady flow of immigrants for population and economic growth. How the U.S. as a host country, receives an immigrant group is important because it impacts the way in which immigrant groups choose to accept and adopt American culture. This study examines the Haitian immigrant community in Miami to test the model of acculturation developed by E. H. Cohen (2011). Cohen's model is unique, because it takes into account the attitudes of the established immigrant community in the host country as a determinant in immigrant acculturation. Although acculturation is an internal process, it can be observed at the community level. This study measures changes in socioeconomic status and political representation as indicators of acculturation. The Haitian community is represented by the residents of the Little Haiti neighborhood in Miami (Census tracts 20.03 and 20.04). Although not representative of the entire Haitian-American community in Miami, Little Haiti is still considered the cultural center. Cohen's model is tested by measuring the SES and political representation of the Haitian community after a change in policy that removed the favored "refugee" status from Haitian immigrants. Cohen's theory predicts a change in the attitudes of the host country towards the immigrant community would produce a change in the level of acculturation. The results show that the change in policy had little impact on the Little Haiti neighborhood. Changes in SES did not significantly vary between Little Haiti and Miami overall. However, the larger Haitian-American community in Miami may have experienced an increased rate of acculturation, as evidenced by the increase in political representation. This may be due to the reduction of the immigrant flow from Haiti. More research is needed to understand the factors that influence Haitian immigrant acculturation in Miami.

S FR-PS4 [POSTER] The Housing Bubble in Brazil, Housing Policy and the Formation of the Urban Development Process, 2005-2012.

Navarro Ballroom (Westin 2nd Floor)

Presenters: Beatriz del Carmen Martínez González

Co-Authors: Leandro Silva Medrano

Is there a housing bubble in Brazil? The recent growth in the civil construction sector, along with the dramatic increase in property prices (132% between 2008 and 2012 in city of Sao Paulo), divided specialists in relation to the possibility of the existence of a bubble real estate in Brazil. On the other hand, countries like the USA and Spain are the economic, social and urban future artificial formation of a promising real estate market. The aim of this paper is to identify the processes of formation of a housing bubble and its implications for the formation of the urban territory. Therefore, we will study the recent Spanish case with the intention to verify correlations with the current reality of the city of Sao Paulo. Its methodology is based on the analysis of economic data and their relation to the processes of urbanization in new territories or transformation of established urban grid. The aim is to provide the tools necessary and relevant in the socio-economic-architectural and urban area in the real estate market, in order to promote discussion on the current situation of Brazilian cities.

S FR-PS7 [POSTER] Tax Increment Financing and Economic Growth – A National Perspective

Navarro Ballroom (Westin 2nd Floor)

Presenters: Christopher Wheeler

Co-Authors: Straso Jovanovski

Tax-increment financing (TIF) has emerged as one of the most popular public tools of development finance. With its gain in popularity, the question remains whether governments that use this tool experience more economic growth than those that do not. Existing research aimed at this question have used site-specific case studies and a national phone survey to determine TIF use led to property value growth of any kind. But the question remains whether across jurisdictional lines any distinctions in economic growth exist broadly between cities that use TIF and cities that do not. This paper seeks to answer that question by examining job, property value and per capita income growth from 2000 to 2010 for a random sample of 60 cities with over 100,000 residents. Using US Census Bureau job growth and income data and property value data from city financial reports, this paper uses multiple and panel regression analysis to determine whether TIF users tend to experience higher levels of property value, job, and income growth than non-users. The paper finds that on average, TIF use has no statistically significant effects on property value growth, job growth, or per capita income growth, however the long-term TIF use produces some negative effects.

2015 Call For Participation

45th Annual Meeting of the Urban Affairs Association

Transnationalism from Above and Below: The Dynamics of Place-making in the Global City

Miami, Florida

April 8-11, 2015

Abstract/Proposal Deadline: October 1, 2014

Late proposals or abstracts are not accepted

Cities have become the central nodes in global networks of exchange—of information, capital, goods, and relationships. While cities in this context are places of promise, innovation, and mobility, they are also the sites of significant challenges. The persistence of poverty and inequality, crime and violence, social exclusion and discrimination, and environmental degradation in cities, reveals the parallel reality of urban distress confronting policymakers, planners, and social actors at all levels. This year's conference theme focuses on place-making in the "global city," with particular attention given to the actors, processes, strategies, and contingencies that shape urban settings and urban life. Thus, the conference theme will explore actions and processes from above (e.g. transnational capital and political institutions), as well as below (e.g. the work of civil society organizations, and the everyday actions of ordinary people).

Miami provides an apt setting for this exploration. Long established as a link between the United States and Latin America and a stronghold of Cuban American culture and political power, Miami remains a regional destination for immigration. The city has become a destination hub for residents from South America and the Caribbean. In addition, Miami remains home to substantial Anglo and African American populations. It has also moved from its prominent role as a trading hub for transactions with Latin America to a substantial site of international banking, finance, information technology, and other high-end service industries. Moreover, as a coastal city in an era of climate change and increasingly high-profile natural disasters, Miami represents a city poised for change through global environmental processes. Against this backdrop, the conference will examine how cities are adapting to meet global economic and environmental imperatives, who is engaged in leading these changes, and what opportunities and challenges these leaders face in mediating local outcomes.
